

Lucille White's Feelings About the Junction

Condensed from her Oral History

People kinda looked down on people that lived in that part of town—in the Junction. Yes. They did. They didn't think we were very good people. But one day a group of us were out playing and the other group decided they's gonna knock us down and they did. And after it was over one of the boys, Dean Worlton, he was the President of the Class, he said he was sorry that had happened.

When your granddaughter, Annette, moved up there in a nice subdivision, you said, "I don't know why anybody would want to live up in that part of town."

I thought we were at the end of the world when we lived there. It was two miles from town—seemed a long ways.
